This page was unintentionally left blank. But then I decided to fill it in with some text.

Welcome to henryd magazine.

After producing daily pieces of art for almost 3 straight years, I've realized that the time has come to allow myself more time to let my production process develop as naturally as the conceptual process.

You can find within this magazine, a log/scrapbook of what goes on behind the scenes in my ongoing journey as an artist.

[REDACTED] AVE, NY, NY. This morning I woke up at the apt of my great friends who recently moved into a great new spot. I'm in town in part because I wanted to catch an old friend of mine before he splits for good.

I met [REDACTED] back in college at the UW in Seattle, WA. He's moving back to the west coast, Seattle next month so I wanted to catch him while I still had the chance. He's a wonderful person and a lot of fun to hang with.

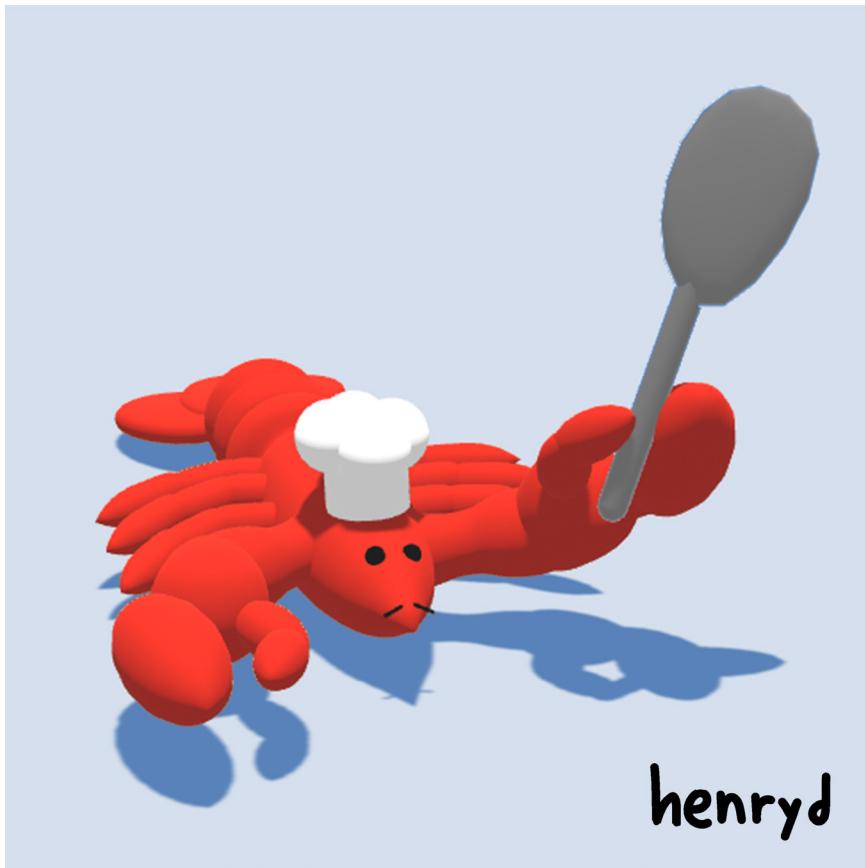

He doesn't like being around people too much, we had a great convo about it. Something about being surrounded by crowds causes anxiety in him - something I know is very common in most people. I must be the weird one because I'm quite the opposite.

I love being around huge crowds. If I'm ever feeling lonely or homesick, my personal fix is to distract myself in a busy market or park and walk around, flowing with the crowd. The ability to do that is why I love the city so much. I've never met a city I didn't like.

Recently I've allowed myself draw minimalism. Perhaps this is a real constant stream of advertisement at all times, a reality of daily life is, I've found that this new approach, overload, has become quite helpful chaotic ideas that bounce around intentional about ideas is how I see my mission is allowing myself to let 'new' wash over me as they arrive, holding me in just the right way. This can kindness to myself feed a bigger ideas of what to create". The end there is nothing new to paint, no
